Washington, D.C. - The American League of Lobbyists (ALL) elected Howard Marlowe as President of its association for a fourth term at its annual meeting today in Washington, D.C. Mr. Marlowe will begin his second consecutive one year term beginning in January 2012. He is the first lobbyist to serve four terms at the helm of ALL since its founding in 1979. Mr. Marlowe previously served two terms as President in the late 1980's.

Mr. Marlowe is a well respected advocate for the lobbying profession with over 30 years of experience working with Congress and the Executive Branch. "It is an honor to be selected by my peers to represent the Lobbying profession and its interests in Washington," Marlowe said. "These are challenging times and it means a lot to know that those in your profession are able to trust you to be their advocate to the public, Congress, and the White House. Lobbyists play an important role in our government and this is a great opportunity for me to do all that I can to protect the constitutional right of all people to petition our government," Marlowe added.

ALL's mission is to enhance the development of high ethical standards, professionalism, and competence for advocates in the public policy arena, and to collectively address challenges facing the profession. ALL actively encourages the advancement of ethical lobbying practices and has a strong Code of Ethics to which every member must subscribe.
